WisdomTree conducts the annual rebalance of its U.S. dividend Index family in December of each year, with the annual screening date occurring on the last trading day of November.¹ The annual screening process provides a plethora of data about how dividends for the U.S. equity markets have changed over time, and gives important information about the underlying market fundamentals. In the table below, we look at the Dividend Stream® for the WisdomTree Dividend Index, WisdomTree’s broadest and most inclusive dividend Index. Dividends, a key gauge of the market’s underlying fundamentals, continue to set new highs with another year of above-average growth. WisdomTree Dividend Index (WTDI) Dividend Stream

• New Record
Dividend Stream: 2015 marks the sixth consecutive year of above-average dividend growth for the U.S. Dividend Stream. Although this was the first time in six years that dividend growth wasn’t in the double digits, the growth was still above the longer-term average of 5.6%, and 2015 marks a new high—over 53% above the mark set in 2007.²

• Tech Titan Growth: Information Technology sector dividends have grown a remarkable 270% since November 30, 2007. At the prior peak, this sector constituted only 5.6% of the Dividend Stream, whereas now it constitutes more than 13.5% and is the second-largest dividend-paying sector behind Financials.

• Financials Displayed Highest Growth: The sector has grown its dividends more than 13% since last year’s screening and has averaged more than 20% growth since hitting bottom in 2009. Despite the impressive growth since then, the sector’s dividends are still slightly below their 2007 highs, and Financials are the only sector whose Dividend Stream remains below its 2007 highs.

• Energy Dividends Relatively Flat: Overall, the sector saw a slight decline in dividends, which is impressive, considering the 37% decline in oil prices and 50% decline in the sector’s core earnings.³ Exxon remains the largest dividend payer in the U.S., with an indicated Dividend Stream of $12.2 billion, and actually grew its dividend by 5.80% over the period. Chevron, the second largest dividend payer in the sector, kept its dividend constant over the period, and ConocoPhillips, the third largest, raised its dividend by 1.37%. Heavily reliant as it is on the price of oil, we believe this sector will remain in focus this year as many try to determine an equilibrium price for oil.

Number of Dividend Payers The November 30, 2015, rebalance screening showed that the Dividend Stream has grown, and one reason for that growth is an increased number of companies paying dividends. At each annual screening date the Index looks to incorporate dividend changes of existing constituents but also include new dividend-paying companies. Throughout the year companies may drop out of the Index as a result of dividend cancelation or other corporate actions such as mergers, acquisitions or even bankruptcy. The table below helps illustrate how these new dividend payers are continuing to be a very significant part of the Russell 3000 Index market cap.

• Over 90 Additions:

There were over 90 additions to WTDI this year, and they contributed $8.6 billion to the Dividend Stream. Despite all the additions, the total number of constituents is still slightly below last year's and WTDI's prerecession highs. The two largest additions were Gilead Sciences and Vereit Incorporated, contributing $2.5 billion and $497 million, respectively.⁴

• A Large Majority of Constituents Exhibited Dividend Stream Growth: Excluding the additions, approximately 80% of the constituents remaining in the Index have increased their indicated Dividend Stream since last year's screening. Such household names as Microsoft, Walt Disney, International Business Machines (IBM) and Apple were some of the leaders in the indicated Dividend Stream growth.⁵

Conclusion WisdomTree interprets this year's aggregate dividend growth of 7.5% as a very positive indicator of underlying market fundamentals. Even more impressive is the fact that this was the sixth consecutive year of above-average dividend growth. We take comfort in the fact that the overall valuations of dividend stocks have not become overly stretched as a result of this strong dividend growth, and believe future dividend growth could provide a notable foundation for potential future gains.
