

INTRODUCING THE EARNINGS PATH

Matt Wagner – Associate Director, Research
04/28/2023

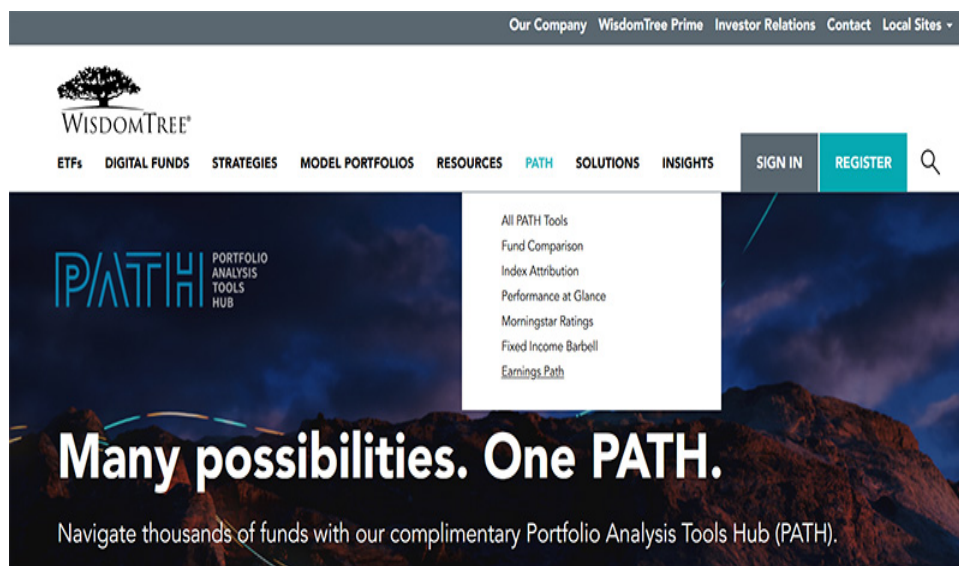

All eyes are on corporate earnings.

The collapses of Silicon Valley Bank (SVB) and Signature Bank in March have led investors to pay extra attention to first quarter earnings for any further signs of distress in the banking industry and for recession signals more broadly.

We have spent the last several months developing a tool called the Earnings Path as a way for investors to track trends in earnings throughout the reporting season.

How to Get There

All our tools are located in the PATH-Portfolio Analysis Tools Hub-drop-down on the WisdomTree website. The Earnings Path can be found at the bottom of this drop-down.

Blended Sales and Earnings Growth

The default setting of the tool shows the S&P 500 Index quarterly earnings summary for the current quarterly reporting season.

The tab that is selected—Growth (All)—shows a blend of actual reported sales and earnings growth with median analyst estimates as of the latest business date.

The below screenshot was taken on April 27. The data includes the actual sales and earnings growth of all companies that had reported 1Q earnings through April 26, blended with the latest analyst estimates.

At the aggregate Index level—summing all the aggregate sales and earnings in 1Q 2023 compared to 1Q 2022—S&P 500 earnings are anticipated to have margin compression, with sales estimated to grow slightly compared to a drop in earnings.

Information Technology—which we can see has the largest weight in the Index—is expected to have a modestly negative sales growth alongside a much larger decline in earnings.

Clicking on the Index entity or any of the sector names shows a time series analysis of year-over-year earnings growth.

From this series, we see that the earnings growth anticipated for 1Q 2023 would be the second consecutive negative earnings growth for the Index—typically called an earnings recession—and the worst earnings growth since the COVID-19 lockdowns in 2Q 2020.

Reported Sales and Earnings Growth

The next tab in the tool—Growth (Reported)—is for actual reported earnings through the latest business date.

Through April 27, 43.7% of the Index had reported 1Q earnings. The biggest banks typically report earlier in the reporting season, which can be seen by the Financials sector having one of the greatest proportions of weight reported, at over 60%.

The Financials that reported by that date had resilient earnings, with sales growth of 13.5% and earnings growth of 11%.

Sales and Earnings Surprise

The last tab of the tool highlights sales and earnings surprise figures—actual sales and earnings reports compared to median analyst estimates.

Similar to the report growth tab, this tab will have greater statistical significance later in the earnings season as more companies report earnings.

To date, 10 out of the 11 sectors show a positive earnings surprise (with Real Estate being the outlier).
